- Megan: 2 ___
- Jack: That's not true! What about the sports centre?
- Megan: 3 ___
- Jack: Yes, I suppose that is a problem. But I could come with you. And it's healthier living here than in the town.
- Megan: 4 ___
- Jack: You see? So living in the village isn't all bad!
- Megan: 5 ___
- Jack: Good – thanks!

- a Yes, I like walking in the country.
- b Maybe, but my friends aren't here to go with me.
- c Mm, perhaps you're right. The air is certainly cleaner.
- d Do you know it?
- e No, I suppose not! OK, you win, Jack!
- f About two weeks ago. But it's really quiet – and boring!
- g Thanks, Jack! It's very different from the town!
- h I don't agree! There's nothing to do!

This is the end of my second week of my trip to Australia and here I am, spending a few days at Ayers Rock, or Uluru as it is called by the Aborigines, near Alice Springs. I took the train from Adelaide because I wanted to see as much of this huge country as possible. It was a really long journey and a bit boring to be honest as there isn't really that much to see – just desert and a few plants here and there! I didn't even see any animals as most of them only come out when it starts to get dark. I guess it's too hot for them in the midday sun.

I'm camping here with a group of students. We've got a fantastic guide who knows so much about the history and geography of this place. It's absolutely boiling during the daytime but freezing at night so it really is extreme. No one can remember the last time there was heavy rain so you can imagine how careful everyone is with water.

Tomorrow we're hiking round Ayers Rock. It doesn't look that big on pictures but it's actually almost 10 kilometres! But I'll manage, I'm sure. The colours are amazing ... reds and oranges and purples, so I'm really looking forward to taking some good photos.
