

Gold Experience grammar presentations

Helping learners to understand language is one of the key roles of a language teacher. To make it easier for you to clarify language with your students, each grammar lesson in Gold Experience is accompanied by a set of PowerPoint grammar presentation slides. Each grammar presentation covers the meaning/use of the language and how it is formed. It ends with a short practice task to check students have understood the key points.

Function: present perfect

Copyright © 2018 by Pearson Education Gold Experience 2nd Edition A2

Form: present perfect

positive	example: I've read all of the author's books.
I/You/We/They	have past participle
He/She/It	has past participle

negative	example: I haven't travelled a lot outside of Europe.
I/You/We/They	have past participle
He/She/It	has past participle

question	example: Have you ever been to Canada?
Have	I/you/we/they past participle?
Has	he/she/it past participle?

short answer	example: No, I haven't.
Yes/No,	I/you/we/they have/haven't
he/she/it	has/hasn't

Notice how the auxiliary (helping) verb, have, changes with the pronouns he/she/it.

The past participle is the third form that you usually find in verb tables. Look...

infinitive	past simple	past participle
to eat	ate	eaten
to travel	travelled	travelled
to speak	spoke	spoken

Some of the past participles are regular (with an -ed ending) and others are irregular.

We can often make the negative with the adverb never, and use ever in questions. Read more on ever and never next...

The use of ever and never...

Copyright © 2018 by Pearson Education Gold Experience 2nd Edition A2

As you can see, the presentations do not just include information to be explained by the teacher. They very much involve the learner through questions designed to encourage students to work out meaning and form themselves. This aims to help learners internalise the language more readily.

You can download each grammar presentation from the Gold Experience resource site or display it in class at the click of a button using the Presentation tool. The presentations can be edited by you quickly and easily, meaning you can adapt them to suit the needs and interests of your class.

Exploiting the presentations

Using a grammar presentation in class

The grammar presentations are primarily designed to be used by teachers when presenting grammar in a lesson. Here are some tips on how to best exploit them in your lessons.

1 Ensure the level is right for your class

Each grammar presentation can be edited which means that you can add, edit or delete content to suit the needs of your class. It could be that you want to reduce the level of challenge with a weaker class, focus on the more challenging aspects of a language point or focus on just one aspect when addressing an issue in remedial work.

2 Personalise the presentation

You can personalise the content by changing the example sentences to make them relevant to your class. This can make the presentation more engaging and entertaining for learners and maintain their interest more readily. Just changing the names of people and places can make a difference.

3 Move through the slides at a pace suited to the class

The slides are designed to be controlled by you which means you can move at a pace relevant to the students in your class. You can spend more time on a slide that students are having difficulty with and less time on one which students have understood quickly. You can also move back through slides to recap on stages if necessary.

4 Involve students and check understanding effectively

The slides include questions to encourage learners to work out meaning and form themselves or to check their understanding of the content. Exploit these successfully by giving all students time to reflect on the questions and think of an answer, either alone or in pairs. Plan how much wait time you will allow for students to come up with an answer (e.g. 20 seconds) to ensure it is not just the fastest students who have this opportunity. Plan how you will gather answers to questions so that you can assess the understanding of the whole class rather than just a few students who put their hands up or call out an answer. One way of doing this is to use a voting system (coloured cards, hands up or a digital version e.g. Socrative) or mini whiteboards where learners write an answer and hold it up for you to see.

5 Use the practice slide to further check understanding

At the end of every grammar presentation is a slide which includes some practice questions. These help you and your students to further check understanding of the grammar presented. Give students time to do the task alone or in pairs and check answers thoroughly to identify problem areas and misunderstandings. You can then return to the relevant slide to clarify anything that is still unclear to students.

Using a grammar presentation out of class

The grammar presentations can be downloaded and then shared with your students, either by email, a document sharing site such as Google Drive, or any virtual learning platform you use with your students. You may wish to do this for the following reasons:

- To provide the material for the students who were absent from a lesson due to illness, etc.
- To provide revision and reference material for students after the presentation is used in class. Students can review it to consolidate their understanding of the language and refer to it when completing homework tasks.
- To flip your lesson. This means that learners work through the slides at home on their own before a lesson. In the next lesson, you spend time checking the learners' understanding of the language but soon move onto speaking activities that give learners a lot of practice in using the language. You could even create a video using a screencasting tool online (e.g. screencast-o-matic) so that your class see the slides and hear your explanation at the same time. To find out more about how to flip a lesson, go to the section called How to Flip the Classroom on p16.